Project Management Organizations

International Project Management Association (IPMA)

IPMA is the recognized international non-profit network type of organization for qualified project management. IPMA's vision is to be the prime promoter of project management as a powerful tool for management of change.

IPMA started in 1965 as a discussion group of managers of international projects. The first international Congress was held in 1967 in Vienna with participants from 30 different countries. Since that time IPMA has developed steadily and is now the prime international promoter of project management in Europe, Asia, and Arab countries. A most significant characteristic of IPMA is the parallel development of 18 associated national societies which serve the specific development needs of each country in its own language. IPMA has thus emerged as the representative body of an international network of national project management societies.
